

Abstract of the Disclosure

The present disclosure contemplates the creation of an active turgid gas liquid interface as means to stimulate various blood components contained within a blood sample, thereby facilitating the formation of fibrin contained within the blood sample, thereby increasing the viscosity of the sample, with such sample being applied to damaged tissue and facilitating tissue repair or tissue sealing components.